

Places of Participation: The History and Architecture of Public Libraries in Germany and the United States

Approaching a Place of Longing

1. Cambridge, 1889: An Iridescent Model

Donation With Conditions

Ultra Rich Donors and Library Funding in America's Gilded Age

Cambridge

A Sumptuous and Innovative Library Building

Two Architects, Who Influenced American Library Architecture

A Strictly Run Place of Education

2. Germany at the Turn of the Century: Tireless Efforts, Unachieved Ideals

Public Libraries in the New World

Precarious Conditions in Germany

A Tangible Model

Different Mentalities: Host and Guest, Not Guard and Reader

Disunity

Abstaining From an Architecture of One's Own

Spatial Ideas Behind the People's Library

Finally: The First Buildings

3. Görlitz, 1907: Women Lead the Library

The Opening

The Founding of the People's Library

City and Site

Referring to the Local Architectural Tradition

Who Used the Library?

The Pioneers

Challenges and Obstacles

»A Jewel for the City and Pride of Its Citizens«

4. Hannover, 1931: A Library Tower as the Exception That Proves the Rule

An Unauthorized Preview

Social Democratic Intentions

A High Rise as Makeshift Solution

The Library Building

Entanglements With National Socialism

5. The Federal Republic After the War: Close to the Model

Measures of the Allies

The Dream of the Public Library Continues in Hanover

6. Seattle, 1960: Twice Demolished, Thrice Rebuilt

Overdue

The First Central Library

The Library and Its Readers

Segregation

The Carnegie Library Served Its Time

»Communication Revolution«

Three Rounds of Voting for a New Library

Demolition

The Space Age and the New Library

The New Building

Quality of Experience in the Library

Changeability in Library Architecture

7. Chicago, 1991: Citizens in Competition With the Jury

A Veto

Harold Washington, Chicago's First Black Mayor

A Parking Lot Gives Way to a Library
A Woman at the Top
The Competition
The Jury
Five Designs for the New Library
8000 Opinions
»Give [the Prize] to the John Buck Company, Please!«
Criticism of the Designs and the Competition
Aggressive Feelings Towards the Public Library
The Jury Meets
The Harold Washington Library Center Opens
Remarks on Citizen Participation

8. Münster, 1993: Who's Afraid of Postmodernism?

A Female Übermensch
The Historical Layout of the City and the New Library
Scars of War
The Winners
Münster's Public Living Room
The Tripartite Library
A »Sensitive Intervention«

9. Cambridge, 2009: The Burden of Citizen Participation

A Library or a Pizzeria?
Setting the Course for the New Building
»Save the Park«
»Not in My Backyard«
The »Civic Heart« of Cambridge
The Decision
»We're Going to Be the Library of ›Yes!‹«
Citizen Participation in Cambridge: Lessons for the Future

Conclusion: Back to Square One

Acknowledgments

Notes

Bibliography

Photo Credits

Index